We can all agree that the genres we love today haven't always been that way. In order to adapt to ~~as a~~ ~~changing audience~~, societal values consistently create interest genres have to adapt to survive. A genre that has shown considerable change and popularity is the centralized vampire television dramas. Over the years our depiction of the prolonged vampire has changed from blood sucking monster to teen heart throb.

Vampires were first introduced to ~~the~~ the silver screen before they appeared on television ^{Horror} Films such as Nosferatu and Bela Lugosi Dracula represent the vampire as a heartless killer, disguised as a charmingly count. These depictions are the origins of the many stereotypical ~~was~~ characteristics we associate with vampires today. The widows peak, slicked back hair, wide collared cloak and jewelled ~~septer~~. ~~septer~~. ~~Horror~~ However when vampires hit the television they needed to be toned down as there are no age restrictions on television. The ~~first~~ one of the first television vampires is Barnabas Collins from the hit television show Dark Shadows 1966. Although Barnabas retains the physical appearance of the other vampires with his counts apparel and charm, Barnabas is considerably modified in his mentality. Unlike the vampires Barnabas is sympathetic and humane. Barnabas is said to ~~not~~ unlike his other counts ^{reluctant to feed} doesn't rebel to his vampire nature or embrace ~~that~~ the monster he is. This is shown in episode 212 where Barnabas comes to a portrait of his former lover Josette "Where ~~was~~ were you when I was turned into something even my own father loathed." This tells us that Barnabas is unhappy with his condition. "Loathed" is such a strong word and the "even" emphasises ~~the~~ how we expect unconditional love from our parents. Barnabas This makes us sympathise with Barnabas because we too are constantly looking to receive our parents' praise and can relate to his torment. This shows the beginnings of a change in how we see vampires. Before we were prepared to stake vampires in the heart but the sympathy we feel for Barnabas prevents us from doing so. We see Barnabas a more human than other vampires and feel sympathy towards him. ~~But~~ Barnabas also feels emotions like humans which draws us to him on another level. Previously vampires were seen as cold blooded killers thirsty for only blood. Barnabas breaks the mold actually falls in love with multiple characters on the show. An example of his longing for love is in episode

302 where Barnabus says he can "bring Vicki the kind of love Burke Perkins never could". This dialogue shows that Barnabus is rich in jealousy and love; two very human emotions. The inconceivable idea that a vampire can love is surpassed by the notion that his love will exceed that of Vicki's fiancé, a human! These emotions we share with Barnabus make him sympathetic and his other ~~def~~ convention defying characteristics as like ~~being~~ seeking a cure for vampirism and being reluctant to feed only emphasises this feeling further.

Buffy The Vampire Slayer 1997 takes the idea of a sympathetic vampire to a new level with creator Joss Whedon's character Angel. Angel is the main vampire in Buffy and unlike the others on the show he is cursed with a soul. This means that he ~~ex~~ feels emotions unlike vampires would normally. Effectively this makes him conscious of his actions and he no longer acts recklessly or voluntarily. This also means he feels pain and regret for the actions he ~~took~~ he took before his soul. In the episode "Surprise" Angel says to Buffy "You have no idea what it's like to have done the things I've done, and to care". This shows the extent of Angel's suffering as like humans he must learn to live with his actions. This creates sympathy for ~~an~~ Angel as we feel the pain he has and relate to the idea of remorse that we often don't see in vampires. As well as growth on the cultural representation of the vampire, Angel is also a lot different in appearance to older vampires such as Barnabas Collins. Angel unlike vampires of yore has ditched the "count Dracula" cape and widows peak and opted for a more natural t-shirt and jeans. Not only does this normalized Angel, as he fits in with humans but it also makes him acceptable poster material.

~~Where~~ ~~vampires like Dracula and even~~ ~~People~~ ~~bury~~ a sympathetic vampire, Barnabas Collins isn't exactly the person we expect to post on our room wall; whereas Angel is a younger and far more normal looking vampire who is heavily marketed at younger viewers. ~~We can see in Angel - how~~ ~~Through his~~ ~~Angel's~~ look and his intimate relationship with Buffy we can see ~~how Angel is a step closer to~~ the change ~~progression~~ in the representation of vampires in TV contextualized vampire dramas.

2009 Vampire Diaries took 'Buffy's sympathetic Angel' and created an even more sympathetic and relatable vampire. Vampires in vampire dramas are completely detached from cinematic Vampires. Although Barnabas Angel ~~has~~ appeared extremely sympathetic they still Maintained ~~identifiably~~ identifiable tropes and characteristics from earlier Vampires. Barnabus was the appeared of a count Dracula and Angel was still bound by weaknesses such as sunlight and the power of the church with the him to the demonic vampires of Old Stephen and Damon from Vampire Diaries seem those free and resemble nothing of an old vampire.

 They dress as normal teens and can even walk time - be exposed to sunlight through large wings. In episode 4.02 Damon pokes fun at the old vampire weakness of the cross by saying "I don't know why but that always makes me smile" when crossing himself in church. This clearly shows how the representation of vampires has changed in Commercial Vampire Drama. No longer are Vampires associated with the demonic creatures of Old. ~~The~~ What this does is make the Vampires on Vampire Diaries extremely sympathetic and normal which makes us like them and see them as the heroes of the show. This idea could not be sold if we still viewed vampires as demons and blood sucking killers. Vampires in Vampire Diaries are not only emotional like Barnabus and Angel have grown to be but have an increased sense of feeling that surpasses everyday humans in Mystic Falls.
 This is explained in the episode called

"turning point" where Elena becomes a vampire. Stefan explains that "Everything you like before will be magnified now" which makes vampires vampirism a desirable condition where people like Elena want to become Vampires and live forever with magnified emotions and super human abilities like strength and speed. This directly contrast to Barnabas who actively seeks a cure and hates being a vampire. This shows how vampires have changed from a monster that we prey on and is demonic to a person with super human abilities like our fantasy super heroes. They are the struggles and characteristics of old vampires and in with the vampires we love and aspire to be like. The representation of vampires and views towards them have completely changed.

Why? Why are we suddenly wanting to sleep with the very same monsters that kept us awake at night? Producers of television dramas have often slowly changed the way vampires are represented because it's more marketable. For a long time the only place for vampires was the horror film genre where only adults could see them. But in order to maximize the potential vampire audience vampires needed to be on TV. However in order to be broadcasted on television a significant change needed to occur to the representation to the vampire.

Vampires needed to be sympathetic and appeal to the audience otherwise they would be deemed too scary and be banned from TV.

This is when we see Barnabas Collins on Dark Shadows. An identifiably vampire character with personality adjustments. Dark Shadows aired at a 4pm after school slot and therefore needed to be age appropriate. Once Barnabas was introduced to the show, Dark Shadows dominated the after school time slot proving ^{barnabas} to be a very popular asset to the show. Producers like Joe Weldon saw this and rode on its success with Buffy The Vampire Slayer a show that cavalantly discussed teens problems ~~about~~ the like virginity, graduation and coming out. Suddenly heaps of show vampire shows are emerging where blood lies which captured the CSI audience

By sympathising and normalising the vampire character shows were able to open the market up to vampires and target for more audiences than before. Even Disney aired the show

"my baby sits a vampire" targeted at children. This ability was enabled because we no longer fear vampires as their representation has changed to something we aspire to be. When vampires shocked the audience but now the potential viewers ~~are~~ are enormous.

An implication ~~of this is~~ of expanding the audience is the enormous revenue that comes from home interest. Shows ~~are~~ have a phenomenal following and these people (primarily teens) are spending an incredible amount of money on the genre. ~~The~~ ~~Am~~ estimated $100 Billion is spent by teens using their own and their parents' money. This is an enormous sum that the TV vampire drama genre is capitalising on. Shows such as Vampire Diaries are immensely popular and the Nielson ratings' claim a 173% increase in popularity since the show's start. Not only the profit from the programs but merchandising has had extremely huge margins with products like T-shirts, posters and coffee mugs being sold for having vampire sympathetic vampires on them. Spin off series for both Vampire Diaries ("Other originals") and Buffy ("Angel") can't even have money for the genre.

broader audience, the genre has incurred enormous profits because of the change. Synergistic
