TEXT A

In this passage the writer is participating in a celebration to mark Matariki, a time of new beginnings.

Matariki

Matariki. It's the time of frozen rising before dawn, of the wet-dog fug of old blankets, of puffer jackets rustling and the clunk of car doors.

TEXT C

A visit to the beach inspires reflection for the writer of this extract.

The Beach

Along the most rugged stretches of the Wairarapa coast you find blackened stones, the remnants of old campfires; here a useful log has been dragged up to the warmth of the flames.
